Course Teaching Assistant: see OWL course site in January

Credit value: 0.5 credit

Antirequisites: the former Anthropology 3301E

Prerequisites: Anthropology 3350F and third or fourth year standing in any Anthropology module.

Unless you have either the requisites for this course or written special permission from your Dean to enroll in it, you may be removed from this course and it will be deleted from your record. The decision may not be appealed. You will receive no adjustment to your fees in the event that you are dropped from a course for failing to have the necessary prerequisites.

Course Description:

This course follows immediately on Anthropology 3350F, continuing with the analysis of social organization by examining the emergence of actual social formations over time, in contexts of unequal power, through a reading of case studies. For instance, we will examine the formation of African tribes in response to British colonial policies, the formation of particular kinds of Latin American peasant communities at the intersection of local and global processes, and the kinds of cultural and political processes that contributed to the emergence of that distinctive form of society we call nations. We will then turn to how complex societies are organized through intersecting dynamics of structured social inequality such as class, gender and ethnicity. Throughout, we will also be exploring the relationship between various forms of social organization and inequality on the one hand and various kinds of identity on the other hand: that is, between social and cultural processes.

Learning Outcomes:

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

- Identify how power relations connect societies in different regions and how subordinate groups respond actively to the circumstances that confront them.

- Examine how differential power operates within societies, and how those relations and the responses to them together generate intersecting and overlapping forms of social inequality and social identity.
- Analyze anthropological concepts and cases and effectively communicate that analysis both orally (through participation in regular class discussions) and in written assignments.
- Work collaboratively with a group of peers to develop shared understandings of course readings and to prepare regular brief oral presentations on those themes.

Course Materials:

Most of the readings for this course can be found in digital format through the “Course Readings” features in the course OWL site, at no cost to students.

Weekly Work Rhythm:

Lessons will be posted on OWL on Thursday each week. Students should do the following activities in order:

1. Read the assigned readings, using the posted discussion questions to identify the most important points and guide your notes. You do not have to wait for the Thursday posting of quizzes and lesson material to begin reading if you prefer to start on Wednesday.
2. Complete the brief online quiz (5 true or false questions) assessing your understanding of the readings. Quizzes are available from Thursday and are due on Tuesday at noon. Once you start the quiz, you will have 10 minutes to complete it.
3. Once you have completed the quiz (as early as Thursday, or up to noon on Tuesday), you can proceed to do the week’s learning activities on OWL. These will include a series of brief recorded PowerPoint lectures and often also some short film clips or other materials. Note that the asynchronous learning activities will address broader issues relevant to the weekly readings. Discussion of the readings, however, will occur in our synchronous Tuesday sessions when we will work through the discussion questions together.
4. Log in to class via Zoom on Tuesday at 7:00 pm to participate in our synchronous class. Students will be divided into discussion groups at the beginning of the term, and every week each group will be assigned one of the pre-circulated discussion questions. After a short break-out room session, all discussion groups will come back together to go through the discussion questions and have a broader conversation about the readings and weekly topic. Students can choose to participate with their cameras and microphones on or off, including by using the chat feature. The weekly discussions are an important part of this class.

Evaluation:

Note about Self-Reported Absences: Any essay that falls under a Self-Reported Absence (SRA) will receive an automatic 48-hour extension. Any quiz that falls under an SRA will be removed from the calculation of your grade (in other words, instead of the best 10 out of 12 quiz grades counted, the best 9 of 11 grades will be counted). You must still contact Professor Clark to let her know that you have submitted an SRA.

Quizzes – 15%

12 brief weekly quizzes, to be completed on OWL before viewing the lecture materials, due no later than Tuesdays at noon – top 10 marks counted at 1.5% each.

Each week there will be a short quiz made up of 5 true or false questions to verify your comprehension of the readings assigned for that week. This is meant to be an incentive for you to keep up with the readings, since you will learn much more from this course if you do so. This will also train you to read more actively, since the quizzes (combined with the discussion questions, see next item) will assess whether you have understood the main points of the readings. No make-up quizzes will be offered, however at the end of the course the lowest two quiz marks will be dropped.

Discussion Participation – 15%

Discussion questions on the readings will be posted at the beginning of the course, and students should do the readings with the discussion questions in mind, making some notes for each answer. The discussion questions are designed to guide you in identifying the most important points in the readings.

Students will be divided into discussion groups in the first week of the course, and the groups will be reconfigured halfway through the term. Each student should come to the synchronous class session prepared to discuss any/all of the discussion questions. At the beginning of the Tuesday session, each discussion group will be assigned one of the questions, at random, to present to the remainder of the class. Following a 15-minute break-out group session where each discussion group will prepare their answer, the class will reconvene to discuss together the assigned questions and any other issues related to the week's topic that students wish to raise.

Discussion participation will be assessed halfway through the term, and again at the end of the course. Part of your discussion grade will be assigned by the members of your group at the end of each six weeks, and part of it will be based on your self-assessment of your contributions to the group. I may adjust grades if necessary to ensure consistency across groups. (Additional guidance will be posted on OWL about how to evaluate discussion group members, and how to be a productive member of a group.) Discussion participation will make up 7.5% percent of the grade for each six weeks, totaling 15% across the course.

Writing Assignments (three short essays and one final take-home essay exam) – 70%

You are expected to write three analytical essays of 1250-1500 words each during the term. These will involve analyzing the readings to answer a specific question. All students must answer the first essay, and then you can choose to answer any two of the remaining three essay assignments. There is also a final take-home essay exam that all students must complete and submit, which will require you to write a synthetic response that encompasses material from across the course.

Essay prompts will be posted two weeks in advance of the due date, which will fall on a Friday. However, late papers will be accepted without penalty for a grace period of 48 hours, up to Sunday night, with no need to explain or ask for an extension. After that, late papers will be accepted for three more days with a late penalty of 5% per day.

The take-home essay exam will be worth 25% of your grade. The three essays will together be worth 45% of your grade. The exact weighting of each essay will be determined by how well you do on each assignment, hence it will be finalized at the end of the term: your essay assignment with the highest grade will be worth 20%, the next highest will be worth 15%, then 10%.

The submission deadlines for the essays are: February 4, March 4, March 18, April 1.

All written work will be subject to submission for textual similarity review to the commercial plagiarism detection software under license to the University for the detection of plagiarism. All papers submitted for such checking will be included as source documents in the reference database for the purpose of detecting plagiarism of papers subsequently submitted to the system. Use of the service is subject to the licensing agreement, currently between The University of Western Ontario and Turnitin.com (<http://www.turnitin.com>).

Course Specific Statements and Policies

As an essay-designated course, three essays and the final take-home exam in this course must be submitted and three of these four assignments must receive passing grades in order to pass this course.

Statement on Seeking Special Accommodations:

No accommodations will be granted retroactively more than 10 days after an assignment's due date. Please see your academic counsellor immediately if you will be seeking accommodations based on medical or compassionate grounds.

Statement on Plagiarism:

Students must write their assignments in their own words. Whenever students take an idea from another author, they must acknowledge their debt both by using quotation marks where appropriate and by proper referencing. It is also a scholastic offence to submit the same work for credit in more than one course. Plagiarism is a major scholastic offence.

Institutional Statements and Policies

All students should familiarize themselves with Western's current academic policies regarding accessibility, plagiarism and scholastic offences, and medical accommodation. These policies are outlined in Western's academic policies by clicking on this link:
